At IC House, the discussion focused on four aspects that are fundamental to a home: a home that breathes, fulfill human needs, identity, and materiality.

Steel construction system with a relatively long span was considered the most suitable solution. The coated steel roof is designed as an overstack to respond to the tropical climate by providing rain protection and sun shading for the 2nd floor.

IC House was never meant to be an iconic, futuristic, or luxurious home. Instead, it began with a simple idea: creating a home that truly meets the needs of the people living in it. This is where Breathing Habitat comes to life: a home that adapts to its occupants, responds to the surrounding environment, and breathes naturally, while still having its own unique identity. Because ultimately, a home is not just about the space we build, but about the quality of life we Lysaght Bluescope Locked Seam - COLORBOND® Steel Gull Grey was selected to create a seamless appearance across the roof, continuing seamlessly down the sides of the building. Its durability against weather conditions and ease of maintenance were key considerations in response to Surabaya's tropical climate.

Recycled PVC panel secondary skin façade,combined with greenery, serves as a visual barrier to maintain privacy from the outside while still allowing natural ventilation and daylight to enter the house
